= THE SKEPTIC: Commodities Cycle Looks Less Super

A DOW JONES NEWSWIRES COLUMN

The Chinese stock-market correction, and renewed doubts about the chances of a soft landing for the U.S. economy are testing those with faith in a commodities super-cycle.

This was predicated on continued robust growth in demand in both the U.S. and China.

But this looks increasingly questionable, explaining why mining and steel stocks have borne the brunt of the selloff in world stock markets Tuesday and Wednesday.

Former Federal Reserve Governor Alan Greenspan's warnings that the market is being complacent about the risk of a hard landing for the U.S. economy in 2007 would have been bearish enough, but evidence that he might be right doesn't help.

There was news of a likely downward revision of US Q4 GDP to 2.2% from 3.4%, and a substantially weaker durable goods orders report.

But the 8.8% fall in the Shanghai composite index is more even more worrying to super-cycle bulls.

The Chinese authorities' efforts to slow fixed investment in China has already helped trigger selloffs in some commodities like copper and aluminum.

But a bursting Chinese stock market bubble might further peg back China's economic growth, strong though it's likely to remain by developed-world standards.

The problem is that it isn't easy to deflate a stock market gently when it has risen as high as the Chinese A-share segment, what with the stories of Chinese investors selling their homes to invest in stocks. The A-market is trading on 36X 2007 P/E multiple compared to the S&P500's 16X, even after this week's declines.

The prospect of further policy tightening and the redemptions by mutual funds invested in China might accelerate the market's declines, rubbing off on the economy at large.

That may well suit the Chinese government.

But investors who've bet heavily on what looked like insatiable Chinese demand for raw materials would be foolhardy to ignore the Chinese authorities' determination to rein in growth and curb frenzied stock-market speculation.

That's particularly as news continue to come in about weakness in the world's leading economy, with Home Depot warning Wednesday that U.S. residential housing construction may not recover until late 2007 or 2008.

AT A GLANCE: Mkts Jittery; Stocks Plummet In Early Trade

Dow Jones International News

DJI

(c) 2007 Dow Jones & Company, Inc.

THE EVENT: Financial markets remain on edge Thursday after a partial reversal Wednesday following Tuesday's equities meltdown.

U.S. EQUITIES: U.S. stocks sink like a stone in the first 15 minutes of trading. The DJIA was off by 170, the Nasdaq dropped 49, and the S&P500 was 22 lower. All 30 Dow components are in the red.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE: The dollar is slipping moderately against the yen, recently touching a new intra-day low of Y117.26 as U.S. stocks open lower. But the greenback continues to fluctuate versus Japan's currency. At 9:34 a.m. EST, the dollar was changing hands at Y117.30 versus Y117.93 late Tuesday, while the euro stood at $1.3232 from $1.3240, according to EBS.

U.S. TREASURYS: Sharp drop in stocks at open pushes 10-year yield to 4.50%, two-year to 4.54%. Yield curve steepening, now -4 bps vs Wed's -8 bps.

RATE FUTURES: Prices for Eurodollar futures climbed Thursday, as signs of a slowing economy caused traders to price in with certainty expectations that the Federal Reserve will cut the federal-funds rate in the second quarter of this year.

Eurodollar futures are the benchmark interest rate market at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. The quarterly June contract on Thursday priced in about a 100% chance that the Fed will reduce the key rate to 5%, from the current 5.25%, in the second quarter.

CRUDE: Nymex crude futures head lower, weighed down by a sharp downturn in U.S. stocks. April crude -65c at $61.15. Apr Brent -48c at $61.41.

GOLD: April gold futures opened $3.70 lower at $669.00 at the Comex division of the New York Mercantile Exchange.

EUROPEAN MARKETS: Fixed income markets very much at the mercy of equities gyrations. Early strength in stocks saw bunds and gilts in negative territory however late session losses for the European equity bourses pushed bond prices back into positive ground. In-between time the Euro-zone mfg PMI came in near forecast at 55.6 while the flash February CPI print slipped to 1.8% vs 1.9% forecast. Gilts suffered slight underperformance after the UK mfg PMI surprised on the upside at 55.4 vs 52.8 seen and the CBI retail sales balance came in at a solid +19 against DJN's +20 forecast. At midday March bunds are +0.16 at 116.38, June gilts +0.10 at 109.28, At 1255 GMT CAC and DAX are down 1.7% and 1.8% respectively while FTSE is -1%.

ASIAN SUMMARY: Stocks still somewhat weak despite modest bounce in U.S., though Greenspan provided a bit more salve for frayed nerves; he was quoted as saying U.S. recession "possible" but not "probable," toning down earlier warning and adding to Bernanke's reassuring remarks overnight. Shanghai Composite down 2.5%, Nikkei down 0.9%, Taiwan (shut yesterday) down 2.8%, HSI off 0.5%. Philippines rebounded 4%; Thai bourse +0.5% amid reports capital controls to be relaxed further. LONDON, Feb 28, 2007 (DJCS via Comtex) --

A DOW JONES NEWSWIRES COLUMN

The Chinese stock-market correction, and renewed doubts about the chances of a soft landing for the U.S. economy are testing those with faith in a commodities super-cycle.

This was predicated on continued robust growth in demand in both the U.S. and China.

But this looks increasingly questionable, explaining why mining and steel stocks have borne the brunt of the selloff in world stock markets Tuesday and Wednesday.

Former Federal Reserve Governor Alan Greenspan's warnings that the market is being complacent about the risk of a hard landing for the U.S. economy in 2007 would have been bearish enough, but evidence that he might be right doesn't help.

There was news of a likely downward revision of US Q4 GDP to 2.2% from 3.4%, and a substantially weaker durable goods orders report.

But the 8.8% fall in the Shanghai composite index is more even more worrying to super-cycle bulls.

The Chinese authorities' efforts to slow fixed investment in China has already helped trigger selloffs in some commodities like copper and aluminum.

But a bursting Chinese stock market bubble might further peg back China's economic growth, strong though it's likely to remain by developed-world standards.

The problem is that it isn't easy to deflate a stock market gently when it has risen as high as the Chinese A-share segment, what with the stories of Chinese investors selling their homes to invest in stocks. The A-market is trading on 36X 2007 P/E multiple compared to the S&P500's 16X, even after this week's declines.

The prospect of further policy tightening and the redemptions by mutual funds invested in China might accelerate the market's declines, rubbing off on the economy at large.

That may well suit the Chinese government.

But investors who've bet heavily on what looked like insatiable Chinese demand for raw materials would be foolhardy to ignore the Chinese authorities' determination to rein in growth and curb frenzied stock-market speculation.

That's particularly as news continue to come in about weakness in the world's leading economy, with Home Depot warning Wednesday that U.S. residential housing construction may not recover until late 2007 or 2008.

EUROPEAN MIDDAY BRIEFING FROM DOW JONES NEWSWIRES

(c) 2007 Dow Jones & Company, Inc.

AMERICAN MARKETS OUTLOOK: U.S. stock markets are set to open higher Tuesday, according to Tom Hougaard of City Index, as U.S. futures have risen on softening oil prices.

"There seems to be some relief on Wall Street that we are back in the 50's ($50 a barrel) for oil rather than the 70's," Hougaard noted.

"However, despite the decent rally last night, it still looks like we are in a corrective mode, with the S&P500 still below 1420," he added.

City Index is calling the Dow Jones Industrial Average to open up 30 points at 12,453, the S&P 500 three points higher at 1416 and the Nasdaq 100 up five points at 2443.

EUROPEAN MARKETS: European shares are edging higher, following a positive close on Wall Street Monday as economic concerns eased after Federal Reserve Vice Chairman Donald Kohn said the economy appears to be weathering the housing downturn.

In London, the FTSE 100 is up 0.5% at 6216, supported by strong mining stocks. On the downside, shares in oil giant BP fell 2.5% after the company's fourth-quarter production estimates disappointed the market. In Frankfurt, the DAX 30 is up 0.4% at 6698.50, buoyed by solid overnight performances in the U.S. and Asia. Tuesday's session is likely to remain quiet, says a trader, as there is little fundamental news to boost the market. In Paris, the CAC-40 index is up 0.6% at 5567.

Gilts are ticking higher after a strong 20-year auction, reversing their earlier losses. The March gilt future is up 0.11 at 107.84. Bunds have edged lower, largely unaffected by stronger-than-expected German November industrial production data. Industrial production rose 1.8% on the month, compared with the forecast 1.0% rise. The March bund future is down 0.06 at 115.90.

The dollar is mixed, as the latest U.S. data and comments from officials reduce expectations of an early cut in U.S. interest rates. At 1150 GMT, the dollar was at Y119.27, up from Y118.70 late Monday in New York. The euro was unchanged at $1.3030, while the pound was up at $1.9421 from $1.9380.
