Be cautious about the market now — and buy these 3 stocks on weakness; Investor sentiment has ramped up and the markets are overbought

Investor sentiment has ramped up and the markets are overbought

It's time to get a bit more cautious about stocks now for two reasons: Investor sentiment has ramped up and the markets are overbought. Consider:

- Sentiment: U.S. markets finished the first two months of 2019 with their best gains in over a decade. So investors were giddy again. That's the bad news, in a contrarian sense. When the crowd forms a strong point of view, contrarians like to tilt the other way. Virtually all of the dozen or so sentiment indicators I track were recently either neutral or bearish. That's bearish — meaning these indicators show too much bullishness.

For example, a reading below 16 for the CBOE Volatility Index (VIX, US) is bearish, since this signals investor complacency. The VIX was just flirting with these levels. Various Ned Davis sentiment polls recently showed excessive optimism, also bearish. Put buying, a bearish bet, has dried up relative to call-buying, which is a bullish bet. So put/call ratios are now in neutral territory.

One saving grace for the bulls is that the Investors Intelligence Bull/Bear ratio, a key indicator I track, has recently hovered around 2.57. For me the warning path sell signal is when this measure is at 4.0 or higher. Currently it is firmly in the neutral zone.

- Technical: More than 90% of S&P 500 (SPX, US) stocks were recently trading above their 50-day moving averages, points out Bruce Bittles, the chief investment strategist at Baird. This is not a good sign. It's important to see broad participation in a trend (broad breadth) to confirm that the trend is real. But too much participation signals over-exuberance for a trend (either up or down), which can foreshadow its demise.
- The 'special friend' indicator: This one's totally anecdotal. But it works. If you're lucky, you have a special market friend who's a great contrarian indicator. I have one who invariably beats his chest about gains and how smart he is right around market tops. At bottoms he sends dire emails proclaiming that world is coming to an end, or worse, and knocking me for every stock I suggested that is down. The boasting typically marks near-term market peaks and vice versa. Last weekend he was in full boast mode about his year-to-date gains.

This is not scientific, but it's a useful sentiment read. If you don't have such a friend, try to cultivate one. Just don't tell them. This will spoil it.

Otherwise, consider tracking your own emotions. Many of us get distraught by portfolio losses, and giddy from the gains. So you, yourself, may be a good contrarian indicator. The best buys are the hardest to make. The best traders feel no emotion at all when moving in and out of the market. This helps them take money from people who are overly emotional and therefore prone to do the wrong thing.

What might cause more stock-market weakness? That's always tough to predict. But here is a top candidate: A lot of bulls are pinning their hopes on a China trade deal to push stocks higher. They will be disappointed. True, there will be a deal, but there is no way it will be comprehensive enough.

President Donald Trump and his team are pushing for too many structural changes in China on how the government manages the economy. Their wish list includes things like a rollback in Chinese subsidies for domestic companies and government favoritism towards Chinese suppliers. Trump also wants an end to restrictions on foreign investments — like the requirement that foreign companies have a Chinese partner — and an end to forced technology transfers.

This may be all well and good, but it will be tough for Chinese leaders to swallow. When investors see that Trump only got a half a deal (mostly tariff concessions) they'll realize trade battles probably are not over — and sell.

If the U.S. market's current weakness leads to continued consolidation, here's what to do:

- Hold cash: This is a good time to trim positions, get completely off margin, and raise some buying power.

Cyclical areas including industrials and housing-related stocks were favored in my stock newsletter Brush Up on Stocks in December because company insiders liked them so much and sentiment was so bad. These might be places to trim because cyclical names like these can do the worst in any sell off. The bottom-line here is that if the pullback continues you don't want to be extended on margin, to avoid margin calls. And you'll want to have some buying power to pick up quality names.

A few companies I've recently suggested in my stock letter are Continental Resources (CLR, US), where founder and energy expert Harold Hamm has been a big buyer; Kinder Morgan (KMI, US), where chairman Rich Kinder has been a big buyer; and BeiGene (BGNE, US), a quality Chinese biotech company developing cancer therapies, which has a partnership with Celgene (CELG, US). BeiGene is well above the buy limits I've set in my stock letter ($25 when introduced, then $101). But it is still a buy on weakness, and it may rally on China trade-deal news.

- Get defensive: If you want to actively trade into any further weakness, tilt towards defensive areas like utilities and real estate investment trusts (REITs). You can do this with exchange-traded funds (ETFs) such as Utilities Select Sector SPDR (XLU, US), Fidelity MSCI Utilities (FUTY, US), Vanguard Utilities ETF (VPU, US), iShares US Utilities (IDU, US), iShares Residential Real Estate (REZ, US), Vanguard Real Estate (VNZ, US), Fidelity MSCI Real Estate Index (FREL, US), and Schwab U.S. REIT (SCHH, US).
- Short-beta trades: Beta refers to how much more a stock moves compared to the market (in the same direction). In a downturn high-beta stocks will decline more. Technology is a typical high-beta sector. So consider owning Direxion Daily Technology Bear 3X Shares (TECS, US) or Direxion Daily Semiconductor Bear 3X Shares x(SOXS, US).

For broader market exposure consider ProShares UltraShort S&P500 (SDS, US) which goes up when the S&P 500 falls.

Remember these are trades, and not buy and holds. That's because they are so volatile. You'll want to take profits or cut losses fast. And these types of ETFs are typically constructed via positions in futures contracts. They must be continually rolled over, which erodes value over the long term.

- Do nothing: If you are truly a long-term investor, do nothing and ride out the weakness, since it does not seem like a recession and a sustained bear market are right around the corner. Buy and hold makes sense in the stock market because over-trading your account can lead to underperformance. Just make sure you really are "buy and hold." A lot of people think they are until the losses start. Then they panic and make the wrong move at the wrong time.
- Be clear about the message — and the messenger: Keep in mind the limits of what sentiment and technical indicators can tell you. They are not saying the market will fall significantly tomorrow or later this week. They are telling us the market is more vulnerable to a pullback now. So further weakness is more likely and you should prepare for it. And if you come across someone saying he or she knows for certain what the market will do tomorrow or next week, run the other way. (Financial news shows are full of these types.) That person is a charlatan who can do real damage to your portfolio.

At the time of publication, Michael Brush had no positions in any stocks mentioned in this column. Brush has suggested CLR, KMI, BGNE, CELG, TECS, SOXS and SDS in his stock newsletter Brush Up on Stocks.

Global Stocks Move Higher After a Bumpy Week

U.S. stocks were set to open higher on Friday after a tumultuous week in markets, where investors had grappled with mixed news from U.S.-China trade talks, a breakdown in conversations on denuclearization in North Korea and a slew of new economic data.

Futures pointed to opening rebounds of 0.6% for S&P500 and 0.7% for the Dow Jones Industrial Average.

In Europe, the Stoxx Europe 600 was up 0.6% in morning trading. And Asian stocks also gained, with the Shanghai Stock Exchange rising 1.8%, Hong Kong's Hang Seng Index up 0.6% and Japan's Nikkei up 1%.

Mainland Chinese stocks were helped by global index provider MSCI's decision to more than quadruple the nation's weighting in its global benchmarks this year.

Global markets have oscillated this week with major U.S. indexes set to end a three-day losing streak on Friday, as investors wrapped their heads around fresh economic data.

Figures from China's National Bureau of Statistics on Thursday showed the official manufacturing purchasing managers index dropped to its lowest level in three years in February, reinforcing concerns about global growth.

Meanwhile, the U.S. economy expanded at a 2.6% annual rate in the last quarter of 2018, new data showed Thursday, slowing from 3.4% in the previous three-month period.

Investors are still concerned, in particular, about how long the expansion in the U.S. economy can continue. President Trump's tax policy buoyed growth in 2018, but Erik Nielsen, chief economist at UniCredit in London, said it was difficult to know how long that boost would last.

"We have a big trouble finding out what multipliers to use, what lags behind to use because we haven't had such a big expansion at the top of the cycle before," Mr. Nielsen said.

Meanwhile, markets were digesting the U.S. decision to abandon, for now, its threat to raise tariffs to 25% on $200 billion of Chinese goods. Even if the softer tone suggests a trade agreement is near, many fear a resolution to the current conflict around intellectual property and the U.S. trade surplus mightn't be the end of U.S.-China rivalry.

"We have started the big battle, the decadeslong battle, between the U.S. and China," Mr. Nielsen said.

The WSJ Dollar Index, which tracks the dollar against a basket of 16 currencies, was up 0.1% on Friday.

The 10-year U.S. Treasury jumped to 2.730%, from 2.711% on Thursday. Yields move inversely to prices.

Markets were also roiled this week by an escalation in the conflict between India and Pakistan, but Indian investors were signaling optimism by Friday.

"It's generally led to buying opportunities," said David Cornell, chief investment officer of the India Capital Growth Fund. "I think the market has over time become quite immune to the saber rattling that periodically happens between the two countries, and very often happens around election times."

India's benchmark Sensex index was up 0.6% on Friday, having dropped sharply earlier in the past week.

Ravi Singh, head of technical research at Karvy Stock Broking in Hyderabad, said Prime Minister Narendra Modi has gained public support for his aggressive reaction to the Kashmir attack, raising the chances that his pro-business administration will win re-election in India's coming vote.

"On the economic front it may cause some damage but overall sentiment is important and if there is going to be election in a few months the current government benefits from the sentiment," he added.

Meanwhile, in the U.K. the opposition Labour Party has confirmed it would support a second referendum on membership of the European Union, while Prime Minister Theresa May has agreed to allow Parliament to delay Brexit, which many analysts say raises the chances that the nation's withdrawal from the bloc will be put off past the March deadline.

Sterling was down 0.3% on the dollar and 0.4% against the euro Friday. The FTSE 100 index, which is dominated by large international businesses, gained 0.7% while the FTSE 250 was up 0.9%.

Elsewhere in commodities, global benchmark Brent crude oil was up 0.1% at $66.37 a barrel.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average has weathered miserable retail-sales data and downbeat headlines about trade, and is down less than 30 points.

The Dow has dropped 27.81 points or 0.1%, to 25,515.46, while the S&P 500 is little changed at 2753.52, and the Nasdaq Composite has gained 0.3% to 7445.81.

As we've noted before, the retail sales data were old and out of sync with the rest of what we've learned since then, and that is probably helping the market look through it. And for every negative trade headline, there is a positive one. Flip a coin. We still see this market being dominated by technicals, and the S&P 500 trading near its 200-day moving average, the market is still waiting to see which way the wind blows.

That might be bad news, however. Nomura's Masanari Takada notes that trend following CTAs -- short for commodity trading advisors -- have probably done most of their buying, which could cause the market to level out, and ultimately turn lower. "Systematic trend followers like CTAs have begun to relax the pace of buying in the US equity futures market, as expected based on their past positioning patterns," Takada writes. "We expect CTA mechanical buying flows targeting upside in major indices like S&P500 to be sporadic and gradually calm down relative to the past two weeks. Based on such typical CTA behaviour, Nomura still assumes that the timing of the next US stock market correction will be 26 February."

We'll hold him to it.

Here are five stocks making moves midday:

-- American International Group (AIG) has slumped 6.7% to $41.24 after releasing earnings that raised more questions than answers.

-- General Electric (GE) has fallen 3.4% to $10.02 after large bearish options trades were placed in the stock. The stock is down 1.2% in February but still up 33% in 2019.

-- Dish Network (DISH) has gained 3.4% to $29.86 despite getting cut to Equal Weight from Overweight at Barclays one day after dropping following its earnings.

-- Marathon Oil (MRO) has jumped 8.7% to $16.90 after reporting better-than-expected sales.

-- Vulcan Materials (VMC) has climbed 6.9% to $113.18 after it reported better-than-expected earnings.
