BROKER COMMENTS:

Dresdner Cuts

BSkyB Price Target

1053 GMT [Dow Jones] Dresdner Kleinwort cuts British Sky Broadcasting (BSY.LN) price target to 430p from 480p. Brokerage is becoming increasingly concerned that Sky may take part in the Digital Plus auction in Spain. Also highlights the risk to the attractive returns shareholders currently enjoy from the possible imposition of a wholesale supply obligation, which regulator Ofcom proposes as part of its ongoing pay TV market investigation. Keeps hold recommendation and remains cautious. Shares +1% to 360p. The owner of Dow Jones Newswires, News Corp, has a 39.1% interest in the British Sky Broadcasting Group. (ANT)

Drax Shrs Drop On New Div Policy -

JP Morgan

1043 GMT [Dow Jones] Drax (DRX.LN) shares -7.8% at 5.67p, after falling more than 9%, as income investors exit the stock after the company lowers its dividend policy in order to finance the construction of three biomass power plants, says Ian Mitchell of JP Morgan. "Drax is much less interesting for income investors who are looking for a high dividend payout," he says. Drax will continue to pay excess cash generated in 2008 and 2009 but will only pay 50% of its annual underlying earnings from 2010 and beyond. JP Morgan has a neutral rating and 820p target price.

Merrill Cuts

Reckitt Benckiser Price Objective

1035 GMT [Dow Jones] Merrill Lynch lowers Reckitt Benckiser (RB.LN) price objective to 2750p from 2900p, on expectations of lower currency gains in 2009. Brokerage lowers '09-'10 EPS by -3.9% to 161.5p and 165.9p to reflect softer consumer backdrop in '09, based on European market growth of 0% and slowing US growth as unemployment rises. "As a result, we have cut our group organic growth rate to 5.2% from 6%," it says. Merrill adds due to updating its currency model, forecasts are cuts by 3% to reflect weaker developing market currencies. Has a neutral rating on the stock. Shares +1% at 2454p.

M Stanley Resumes Reed Elsevier At Equalweight

1031 GMT [Dow Jones] Morgan Stanley resumes Reed Elsevier (REL.LN) at equalweight, with a 590p target price. Sees the company as a relatively safe home for funds in the media sector, noting its defensive profile and decent growth prospects. "On a medium-term view, a 2009 P/E of 12 and an EV/Ebitda multiple of 9 for a business with the potential of Reed should be regarded as undemanding, in our view," it says. Brokerage says it generally favors the defensive professional publishers, but at these levels continue to prefer Pearson (PSON.LN). Has an overweight rating on Pearson. Reed shares -3.5% at 500p and Pearson shares -1.3% at 578p.

RBS Cuts CSR Target Price To 220p From 263p

1015 GMT [Dow Jones] RBS cuts its target price for CSR (CSR.LN) to 220p from 263p. "Recent data points in the handset, headset, portable navigation devices and personal computer peripheral markets suggest that end demand has considerably softened since the end of September," the bank says. Adds that CSR continues to lose market share in its key handset and headset segments, primarily to Broadcom (BRCM). Keeps hold rating. Shares -1.5% at 180p.

RBS Cuts Experian Price Target

1012 GMT [Dow Jones] Royal Bank of Scotland lowers Experian (EXPN.LN) price target to 390p from 445p but maintains a buy rating. Says while wider market sentiment has de-rated, the stock and challenges remain, it still benefits from a diverse business model, unique assets, market leadership and a clear transferable strategy. "Given recent economic turmoil, the company understandably says the outlook is still extremely uncertain. Despite this, we believe market forecasts, for the short term at least, remain well-founded." Shares -1.2% at 296p.

Wolseley Stock Ops Move Welcome, Doubts Remain

0950 GMT [Dow Jones] Wolseley's (WOS.LN) aggressive action to resolve issues in its Stock business has to be applauded, says Panmure Gordon. But there is uncertainty fueled by its ongoing US residential exposure, according to the brokerage. Says "with other options not possible or feasible, further swinging cuts to branches and headcount will occur." Notes Wolseley remains a geared play on market sentiment, tending to outperform when the FTSE100 or S&P500 are strong, and then giving it all back. Maintains sell recommendation and 280p price target. Shares -8.4% to 279p.

Go-Ahead Trading In-Line - Panmure

0934 GMT [Dow Jones] Go-Ahead Group (GOG.LN) is trading in-line with expectations says Panmure Gordon and the company's financial position is strong with a solid balance sheet and good cash flows. Notes its financing is secure through to 2012 and the company intends to maintain a progressive dividend yield. Says "despite the economic uncertainty, current demand remains robust." Says although there are likely to be sustained questions regarding the Southern franchise expiry next year, the brokerage believes the shares look attractively valued. Maintains buy recommendation and 2050p price target. Shares +1.9% to 1562p.

BEND, Ore. (WSSS) <http://www.wall-street-sector-selector.com/> -- As we head towards the end of 2008, all of the big news in the financial press has focused on the bear market and the dramatic events that have restructured the global financial landscape.

But while the major markets have lurched and lunged, numerous stealth markets have generated profit opportunities, and today we find ourselves in a cone of confusion that could have dramatic implications for our portfolios in the weeks and months ahead.

So far in 2008, the stealth markets have been varied and rapidly shifting.

In the first and second quarters, the commodity sector offered single- and double-digit gains in agriculture and oil, but then in the third quarter, the market lunged in a different direction as sector leadership changed completely with solid gains in sectors like biotech and transportation.

And in the early days of the fourth quarter, leadership shifted again as inverse exchange-traded funds, ETFs that move opposite to a major index or sector, were the clear winners until Monday, Oct. 13 when Wall Street Sector Selector went to cash and the Dow Jones Industrial Average (INDU, US) took off on its record 11% one day rally.

I have no idea how long we'll be in cash, but it is the latest "sector" we've been in this year, and we're there because as the old saying goes, "Sometimes the best position is no position."

And that's because after October's slow motion crash, the market seems to have entered a cone of confusion, where the Dow oscillates wildly with daily triple-digit swings and can make or lose a year's worth of gains in just a day or two.

Volatility typically signifies a bottom; however, this has by no means been yet confirmed. Unfortunately I don't have a crystal ball, but looking ahead, I believe that we'll exit this cone of confusion in a dramatic fashion with either a break upwards into a new rally or a break downwards through the October lows in an ongoing bear market.

Rather than try to call a market bottom, which is always a treacherous game, I will be looking for confirmation that indeed we have left this cone of confusion. On the upside, that will be a break through roughly 9750 on the Dow and seeing MACD, the Moving Average Convergence Divergence, shifting to positive. At that time we should also see the percent of stocks trading above their 50-day moving average turn positive and the Dow move above its 50-day moving average.

When those things happen, the probability of a new upturn is likely and there could be dramatic opportunities to profit in major sectors like the BRIC countries, (Brazil, Russia, India and China) consumer staples and transportation. The key to sector rotation is to find sectors that have strong relative strength, good price momentum and are deeply oversold and these three are among the highest scoring sectors on those counts.

On the other hand, if the cone of confusion resolves itself with an exit to the downside, we will see a break below the October lows of 7773 on the Dow and a continuation of the negative MACD and Relative Strength Indicators. In this direction, there will be no place to hide except in the inverse ETFs that allow us to short the major indexes and many sectors.

A good example of the potential of an inverse ETF is seen in the recent chart of the ProShares Short S&P500 (SH, US) that offered ample profit opportunities while the major indexes cratered over the second half of the year.

So regardless of what happens, the well worn but completely accurate saying remains true: "There's always a bull market somewhere."

Stealth markets in sub sectors will continue to offer possibilities for profits and as the market finds its way to the exit of the cone of confusion, new opportunities will present themselves regardless of the direction the market takes.

John Nyaradi is Publisher of Wall Street Sector Selector, an online financial newsletter specializing in sector rotation using exchange-traded funds. (wall-street-sector-selector.com)

LONDON (Dow Jones)--Concerns about the prospect of a prolonged downturn in the global economy look set to dominate trading in the European financial markets Wednesday.

Share prices are expected to lose ground, as are raw material prices, while government bonds are steady as traders balance safe-haven inflows against the prospect of increased issuance to pay for bank bailout programs.

"Following the largest rally in the S&P500 since the 1930s, there was a bit of a pullback in U.S. equity markets overnight (Tuesday), with investors turning back to the real economy impact of the recent tightening up in credit markets and therefore corporate earnings," said analysts at Barclays Capital in a note to clients.

"As Japan learned in the late 1990s and early 2000s, it takes a few years, not a few months, to solve a credit crunch by disposing of a large amount of non-performing assets... In addition, we think financial markets will focus on deterioration in the U.S. fiscal position," they said.

Ahead of the opening of European stock markets, the spread-betting firm BGC Partners is calling the FTSE 100-share index in London to open down 59 points at 4335, the DAX in Frankfurt to open down 29 at 5170 and the CAC-40 in Paris to open down 39 at 3562.

Meanwhile, concern that a global slowdown will hit commodity prices sent oil futures lower. The November Brent crude oil contract was trading at $74.23 per barrel at 0615 GMT, down from $74.53 in late New York business Tuesday. The November Nymex light crude contract was at $78.37, down from $78.63.

"In FX markets, renewed risk aversion factors saw the yen do best overall while commodities are lower, oil hovering just above 12-month lows." said Charles Diebel at Nomura. The dollar was quoted at 101.75 yen at 0620 GMT, down from 102.10 in late New York business. The euro was little changed at $1.3616.

In the government bond markets, prices were modestly higher as "flight to quality" buying outweighed fears of a huge increase in supply to rescue the banks.

The 10-year U.S. Treasury note was quoted at 99-25 at 0625 GMT, up 13/32, cutting its yield to 4.025% from 4.08%. The December German bund future was quoted at 114.10, up 0.11.

In the credit markets, the Markit iTraxx Europe index was little changed at 124/125 basis points.

LONDON (Dow Jones)--Concerns about the prospect of a prolonged downturn in the global economy look set to dominate trading in the European financial markets Wednesday.

Share prices lost ground in early business, as did raw material prices, while government bonds were firmer as safe-haven inflows outweighed the prospect of increased issuance to pay for bank bailout programs.

"Following the largest rally in the S&P500 since the 1930s, there was a bit of a pullback in U.S. equity markets overnight (Tuesday), with investors turning back to the real economy impact of the recent tightening up in credit markets and therefore corporate earnings," said analysts at Barclays Capital in a note to clients.

By 0720 GMT, the FTSE 100-share index in London was down 1.8% at 4313.6, the DAX in Frankfurt was down 1.6% at 5115.0 and the CAC-40 in Paris was down 1.5% at 3573.6.

Elsewhere, concern that a global slowdown will hit commodity prices sent oil futures lower. The November Brent crude oil contract was trading at $74.49 per barrel at 0720 GMT, down from $74.53 in late New York business Tuesday. The November Nymex light crude contract was at $78.48, down from $78.63.

"In FX markets, renewed risk aversion factors saw the yen do best overall while commodities are lower, oil hovering just above 12-month lows." said Charles Diebel at Nomura. The dollar was quoted at 101.52 yen at 0720 GMT, down from 102.10 in late New York business. The euro was weaker at $1.3607, down from $1.3619.

In the government bond markets, prices were modestly higher as "flight to quality" buying outweighed fears of a huge increase in supply to rescue the banks.

The 10-year U.S. Treasury note was quoted at 100-00 at 0725 GMT, up 20/32, cutting its yield to 4.00% from 4.08%. The December German bund future was quoted at 114.29, up 0.30.

In the credit markets, the Markit iTraxx Europe index widened to 127.25 basis points from 124bps.

NEW YORK (Dow Jones)--Emerging market stocks went through the roof Monday as massive global moves to steady banks bolstered the battered asset class, but managers were not ready to call an end to the roller coaster just yet.

Developing-world shares shot up in New York, with the Bank of New York's Emerging Markets American Depository Receipts index ending the day 20.3% higher at 222.38 points - nearly double astounding gains for Dow Jones Industrial Average and the S&P500 index. The bank's Latin America ADR index was up 26%, while its Asia index was up 17%.

For the 10-year index that tracks developing-world equities in New York, "it's the highest it has ever been in one day," said Anthony Moro, the bank's head of Emerging Markets.

Regional stock exchanges also posted steep gains, with Brazil's benchmark Ibovespa index soaring 14%, Mexico's IPC 11% higher, and India's Sensex up 7.4%.

The boost came from a concerted move by U.S. and European authorities, who vowed to inject billions directly into financial institutions, essentially achieving what other actions had so far failed to do -- restore at least a little bit of confidence in the markets.

But how long that confidence will last remains an open question, despite the sharp upward moves for the ADRs and local stock exchanges in developing countries.

"It is too early to tell," said Bill Larkin, a money manager at Cabot Asset Management, which caters to high-net-worth clients. "We don't know who's going to be the next Iceland."

Market participants spent the last few weeks focusing on structural problems rather than the positive fundamentals for emerging markets, so there's still an underlying lack of confidence in the system, said Larkin, who helps manage about $350 million in assets.

"A lot of cash that had been sidelined has started to come back," but a renewed wave of selling is likely to return, said Don Gimbel, a money manager at Carret & Co.

"I am cautious that we've seen the worst of it," he said, adding that when major institutions such as Fannie Mae and Lehman Brothers faltered, market participants thought they had seen the bottom, which turned out not to be true.

In any event, the recovery time will be long, said Gimbel, who helps manage about $160 million in emerging market equities.

In the meantime, he has done some buying, particularly in Asian stocks, selling for a fraction of their growth potential, he said.

The latest volley of deep lows has unlocked value in several emerging market companies, and managers have turned their attention to their cheaper valuations. Firms focusing on domestic trends unshaken by the financial meltdown are also on the radar.

"Can we go down another 10%? Sure, but valuations are very attractive," said Todd Henry, an emerging-market portfolio specialist with T. Rowe Price in Baltimore.

Five-year average price-to-earnings ratios for developing-country companies hover around 11 times. After the trough, emerging-market P/E ratios are now around 6.5 times.

T. Rowe Price didn't make any significant portfolio changes in the downturn, and continues to believe in the power of domestic-oriented equities such as consumer staples, said Henry, who helps manage about $15 billion in emerging-market stocks.

The firm is also opportunistically buying stocks heavily sold off. "We're taking advantage of the indiscriminate selling" by investors pressured for cash, he said, without giving more details.

Positive macroeconomic and demographic trends in emerging markets haven't disappeared overnight, said Glen Finegan, analyst with First State Investments in London. Thus, First State also placed bets on consumer-related stocks and in countries that bore the brunt of the sell-off, such as Brazil and Russia, which "suffered disproportionately," Finegan said.

First State is currently staying away from real estate, materials and financial firms in emerging markets, he said. On the other hand, it is bullish on gold companies and betting that, with central banks less worried about inflation, companies such as supermarket chains are also good places to park money.

Such firms include X5 Retail Group N.V. (FIVE.LN), Russia's biggest retailer by sales; Hindustan Unilever Ltd. (500696.BY), India's largest consumer goods maker by sales; Brazil cable provider Net Servicos (NETC); and South Africa's AngloGold Ashanti Ltd (AU), which benefits from lower oil prices, as well as from higher gold prices.
